(By International News Service)
Vera Cruz, July 15—It is regarded as absolutely certain there will be an end of the Huerta regime within 48 hours. This conclusion is based on the fact that Huerta has permitted his trusted Twenty-ninth regiment to accompany Mrs. Huerta and family as refugees in the exodus from Mexico City.

General Funston believes that the fleeing Huerta party, instead of coming here, will probably switch to Cordova, thence to Puerto, Mexico.

Developments in Mexico City have caused all Mexicans to believe that the dictator has definitely decided to abdicate. They believe his departure from the capital is only a matter of hours.

Juarez, July 15—General Villa arrived here today and will remain 10 days. He is arranging for the shipment of arms, which are necessary at the front.

Villa received a dispatch from General Orbeon, reporting the seizure of 4000 rifles, 1000 cavalry horses and 500,000 pesos belonging to federalists when he captured Guadalajara. Orbeon's prisoners now total 6000.

Carranza is Defiant.

Washington, July 15—Mexico City is to fall before the onslaught of armed Constitutionalists, it was feared here Tuesday. Carranza's defiant attitude, officials think, makes any other solution impossible unless a marked change occurs in 48 hours. As a result the United States will be forced to assume responsibility for what the immediate future holds for not alone the Mexicans themselves, but for the

Negress Gives Damaging Evidence Before Grand Jury

TWO MEMBERS OF JURY RESIGN

Sheriff Pettit Resigns a Letter in Which a Bookster Mrs. Amos That He Fired the Shot Which Caused the Death of Mrs. Louise Bailey—Says He Was Stagnated as Woman.

(By International News Service)

New York, July 15—Two members of the Nassau county grand jury investigating the murder of Mrs. Louise Bailey withdrew because of their strong personal friendship for Dr. and Mrs. Carman. Alvah R. Smith and Daniel Rayner, the two who resigned, told Prosecutor Smith that the friend of their friendship would bias their judgment.

Detectives are seeking two witnesses to support the story of Cecilia Coleman, the Carman negro maid, that immediately following the shooting of Mrs. Bailey, Mrs. Carman rushed into the kitchen, "all excited and out of breath." The two missing witnesses are said to be women, who fled from Dr. Carman's waiting room when the shot was fired.

Mrs. Carman is on the verge of a nervous collapse and it is unlikely that Prosecutor Smith will permit her, as she requested to go before the grand jury with her story.

Attorney Levy, Mrs. Carman's counsel, declared he would confront the grand jury tomorrow with evidence tending to destroy the effectiveness of E. T. Barden's story that he saw a woman corresponding to Mrs. Carman rushing toward the Carman kitchen after the shooting.

Man Says He Shot Mrs. Bailey.
Harry De Beau testified to seeing Mrs. Bailey enter Dr. Carman's office on the night of the tragedy. While De Beau was testifying Sheriff Pettit received a letter from Rochester, N. Y., in which a man wrote that he killed Mrs. Bailey.

Dr. Carman, he wrote had broken up his home. Resolving on revenge, he visiting the Carman office and, dressed as a woman, fired the fatal shot. The sheriff said: "The letter was apparently written by a crank."

Mrs. Helen Corey, relative of Mrs. Carman is one of the missing woman witnesses so badly needed by the prosecution.

Shirley Pettit Resigns a Letter in Which a Rochester Man Asserts That He Fired the Shot Which Caused the Death of Mrs. Louise Bailey—Says He Was Disguised as a Woman.

(By International News Service)
New York, July 15—Two members of the Nassau county grand jury investigating the murder of Mrs. Louise Bailey withdrew because of their strong personal friendship for Dr. and Mrs. Carman. Alvah R. Smith and Daniel Rayner, the two who resigned, told Prosecutor Smith that the feared evidence their friendship would bias their judgment.

Detectives are seeking two witnesses to support the story of Cecilia Coleman, the Carman negro maid, that immediately following the shooting of Mrs. Bailey, Mrs. Carman rushed into the kitchen, "all excited and out of breath." The two missing witnesses are said to be women, who fled from Dr. Carman's waiting room when the shot was fired.

Mrs. Carman is on the verge of a nervous collapse and it is unlikely that Prosecutor Smith will permit her, as she requested to go before the grand jury with her story.

Attorney Levy, Mrs. Carman's counsel, declared he would confront the grand jury tomorrow with evidence tending to destroy the effectiveness of E. T. Bardee's story that he saw a woman corresponding to Mrs. Carman rushing toward the Carman kitchen after the shooting.

Man Says He Shot Mrs. Bailey.
Harry De Beau testified to seeing Mrs. Bailey enter Dr. Carman's office on the night of the tragedy. While De Beau was testifying Sheriff Pettit received a letter from Rochester, N. Y., in which a man wrote that he killed Mrs. Bailey.

Dr. Carman, he wrote had broken up his home. Resolving on revenge, he visited the Carman office and, dressed as a woman, fired the fatal shot. The sheriff said: "The letter was apparently written by a crank." Mrs. Helen Corey, relative of Mrs. Carman is one of the missing women witnesses so badly needed by the prosecution.

WHAT?

What would you do if you were in Huerta's place?

Good evening! Certainly, you are going to help the Labor Day celebration along.

A MORAL TOWN.

It is gratifying to learn that the carnival which is now showing in Clearfield is not as black as it was painted in a letter sent to a Philadelphia newspaper by a Milton correspondent. Milton, by the way, must have reformed in its morals within the past decade if its citizens now rise up to denounce anything in the line of carnivals. Clearfield is not ready to welcome managers of gambling devices and the story which reached here anent the carnival was such an one as to arouse the anxiety of the good people of the town.

An investigation of the devices used by the carnival to amuse the public has been made by the borough authorities, who pronounce the entertainment offered as innocent of the terrible charge brought against the managers. With this guarantee from the borough fathers and legal department the people who enjoy carnival amusements need not be afraid that they will be shocked by anything which might transpire on the carnival grounds, unless it be the conduct of a few members of the home-talent troupe of jokers who have not yet fallen under the influence of the era of morality which exists here.

That the borough authorities, police department and others who have the moral welfare of the town in their keeping should regard it as their duty to investigate the carnival proves that Clearfield is populated by people who are jealous of their good name. No performance which is not sanctioned by the rules of decency will find it possible to attract the citizens of Clearfield. The town's own people are law-abiding, and they are not inclined to permit their sons and their daughters to be led into temptation under any circumstances.

NEW HAVEN LOOTING.

The story of the looting of the New Haven railroad property, as found in the report of the interstate commerce commission, should not startle the people. There is scarcely a railroad property in the United States which has not suffered seriously through the weak-mindedness of its directors and the peculations of its officers. The New Haven road was managed in the interests of the money gamblers, not in the interests of the stockholders. The law may not be able to punish the directors of the New Haven road because of the statute of limitations, but the law, through the interstate commerce commission, should get after the directors of other railroads and other big business concerns and either cause these directors to make good the thefts which have been committed or send them to the penitentiary. The worst feature of the proven crimes of the men at the head of the New Haven affairs is that President Wilson is willing to take their advice in planning his financial legislation.

A Barnesboro lad of eight years was killed by a trap set by a merchant of the town whose candy case had been robbed several times. The little fellow with a sweet tooth is dead, and the merchant no doubt regrets that a human life was sacrificed that his sweets might be safe.

And there are a number of postoffices in this neck of woods presided over by Republicans. That's what makes our Democratic friends so hot under the collar.

It is shown that the month of June produces a larger number of weddings and unities of any month in the year. You can draw your own conclusions.

Dr. Brumbaugh's silence on the issues of the campaign will prevent anybody yelling for him after the election of Dean Lewis.

IN THE MOVIES

The twelfth series of "Lucile Love" shows that Lucile has gained possession of the priceless documents, still she is in a more dangerous position than ever before. She finds herself Hugo Lobeque's prisoner in his own house in San Francisco. Her position is especially dangerous because Lobeque is now extremely tired of the bother she has caused him. She realizes that he is now in deadly earnest, and when he demands the return of the papers she hands them over to him in fright and misgiving. When man is aroused to his fullest capacity there is nothing he will not stop at. Lucile realizes this intuitively.

A fortunate incident to divert Lobeque's anger occurs when Thompson the crook-baiter, enters Lucile accuses him of stealing her jewels and takes them from his pocket to prove it. The spy's anger and impatience finds vent on the butler and he knocks him senseless.

While she is waiting for her fate to be decided, Lucile sees her lover, Lieutenant Gibson, coming to her rescue. However, Lobeque sees him almost as soon as she does and gives an order to his servants to prepare for the attack. Lieutenant Gibson, however, is as quick in action as Lobeque and forces his way into the house. Lucile is carried away by Lobeque's men and hid in a tunnel. Lobeque, although forced to surrender to Gibson, leaning against a secret door, escapes. Lucile makes a plan with the butler—who resolves to leave Lobeque—by which they will both escape. Lobeque is suspicious and watches them and catches Thompson, but Lucile escapes in the automobile with the valuable papers. Then Lobeque gives the order to his men "Shoot! But don't shoot to kill!"

The greatest love story of the ages "Anthony and Cleopatra," has been staged in Rome. The story is the familiar one made immortal by Shakespeare, of Marc Anthony and his infatuation for Cleopatra. A Roman, Anthony Novella, a fine manly fellow, worthy of the love of the real Cleopatra, played the part of Anthony. Jeane Ferrielle, also a Roman, played the part of Cleopatra, and so well has she played good after trials, and the monied men of Clearfield will be very careful not to encourage any wildcat scheme promoted by unreliable or impractical men.

Future Looks Bright.
 With the revival of business which is anticipated within the next two months it is expected that Clearfield will be among the towns which will be benefited by the restoration of confidence expected to ensue.

The big tile company which has been favorably impressed with the natural resources and other inducements which Clearfield offers is expected to renew its negotiations for a suitable site here, and the Chamber of Commerce is only awaiting the upward trend of business to begin an active campaign for new industries of a substantial character which seek just what this town has to offer.

Parable of Life.

There is a wireless telegraph apparatus in a certain home and the boys explain that they can only receive but not send. It takes power to send, and power costs. So they fling out their aerial to catch messages from far and near, and never send a message in return. The incident is a parable of life.

BIG EATERS GET KIDNEY TROUBLE

Take Sals at first sign of Bladder irritation or Backache.

The American men and women must guard constantly against Kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidney tries to filter out, they weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy nervous spells, acid stomach, or have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Sals; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys; to neutralize the acids in the urine, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Sals is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage, and because it is in every home, because no body can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

World's Greatest Short Stories

"That may be," says Billy Fish, "and yet I should be sorry if it was." He sinks his head upon his great fur cloak for a minute and thinks "King," says he, "be you man or god or devil, I'll stick by you today. I have twenty of my men with me, and they will follow me. We'll go to Bashkal until the storm blows over."

"A little snow had fallen in the night and everything was white except the greasy fat clouds that blew down and down from the north. Dravot came out with his crown on his head, swinging his arms and stamping his feet and looking more pleased than Punch."

"For the last time, drop it, Dan," says I in a whisper. "Billy Fish here says there will be a row."

"A row among my people?" says Dravot. "Not much. 'Peuchey, you're a fool not to get a wife too. Where's the girl?" says he with a voice as loud as the braying of a jackass. "Call up all the chiefs and priests and let the emperor see if his wife suits him."

"There was no need to call any one. They were all there leaning on their guns and spears round the clearing in the center of the pine wood. A deputation of priests went down to the little empire to bring up the girl, and the horns blew up fit to wake the dead. Billy Fish saunters round and gets as close to Daniel as he could, and behind him stood his twenty men with matchlocks, not a man of them under six feet. I was next to Dravot, and behind me was twenty men of the regular army. Up comes the girl, and a strapping wench she was, covered with silver and turquoise, but white as death and looking back every minute at the priests."

"She'll do," said Dan, looking her over. "What's to be afraid of, lass? Come and kiss me." He puts his arm round her. She shuts her eyes, gives a bit of a squeak, and down goes her face in the side of Dan's flaming red beard.

"The girl's bitten me!" says he, clapping his hand to his neck, and sure enough his hand was red with blood. Billy Fish and two of his matchlock men catches hold of Dan by the shoulders and drags him into the Bashkal lot, while the priests howl in their lingo, "Neither God nor devil, but a man!" I was all taken aback, for a priest cut at me in front, and the army behind began firing into the Bashkal men.

"I tried to give some sort of orders to my men—the men of the regular army—but it was no use, so I fired into the brown of 'em with an English Martini and drilled three beggars in a line. The valley was full of shouting, howling creatures, and every soul was shrieking. 'Not a God nor a devil, but only a man!' The Bashkal troops stuck to Billy Fish all they were worth, but their matchlocks wasn't half as good as the Kabul breechloaders, and four of them dropped."

"We can't stand," says Billy Fish. "Make a run for it down the valley. The whole place is against us." There wasn't more than six men, not counting Dan, Billy Fish and me, that came down to the bottom of the valley alive. "My own notion is that Dan began to go mad in his head from that hour. He stared up and down like a stuck pig. Then he was all for walking back alone and killing the priests with his bare hands, which he could have done. 'An emperor am I,' says Daniel, 'and next year I shall be a knight of the queen.'"

"All right, Dan," says I, "but come along now while there's time." "It's your fault," says he, "for not looking after your army better." I was too heartless to care, though it was all his foolishness that brought the smash.

"I'm sorry, Dan," says I, "but there's no accounting for natives. 'This business is our Fifty-seven. Maybe we'll make something out of it yet, when we've got to Bashkal.'"

"Let's get to Bashkal then," says Dan, "and when I come back here again I'll sweep the valley so there isn't a bug in a blanket left."

"We walked all that day, and all that night Dan was stumping up and down on the snow, chewing his beard and muttering to himself."

"There's no hope of getting clear," said Billy Fish. "The priests will have sent runners to the villages to say that you are only men. Why didn't you stick on as gods till things were more settled? I'm a dead man," says Billy Fish, and he throws himself down on the snow and begins to pray to his gods."

"Next morning we was in a cruel bad country—all up and down, no level ground at all and no food either. The six Bashkal men looked at Billy Fish hungrywise as if they wanted to ask something, but they said never a word. At noon we came to the top of a flat mountain all covered with snow, and when we climbed up into it, behold there was an army in position waiting in the middle!"

"The runners have been very quick," says Billy Fish, with a little bit of a laugh. "They are waiting for us."

"We're done for," says Dan. "They are Englishmen, these people, and it's my blasted nonsense that has brought you to this. Get back, Billy Fish, and take your men away; you've done what you could, and now cut for it. Carnahan," says he, "shake hands with me and go along with Billy. Maybe they won't kill you. I'll go and meet 'em alone. It's me, the king, that did it."

"Go!" says I. "I'm with you here, Billy Fish, you clear out, and we two will meet those folk."

"I'm a chief," says Billy Fish, "and I'll stay with you. My men can go."

"The Bashkal fellows didn't wait for a second word, but ran off. It was cold—awful cold. I've got that cold in the back of my head now. There's a lump of it there."

Carnahan was shivering, and I feared that his mind might go. I wiped my face, took a fresh grip of the pitifully mangled hands and said, "What happened after that?"

"What was you pleased to say?" level he could get over more ground at one stride than any animal of his breed was his strong suit, you understand, and when it came to that Smiley would ante up money on him as long as he had a red. Smiley was monstrous proud of his frog, and well he might be, for fellers that had traveled and been everywhere all said he had over any frog that ever they see.

"Well, Smiley kept the beast in a little lattice box, and he used to fetch him downtown sometimes and lay for a bet. One day a feller—a stranger in the camp he was—came across him with his box and says:

"What might it be that you've got in the box?"

"And Smiley said, sorter indifferent like, 'It might be a parrot, or it might be a canary maybe, but it ain't—it's only just a frog.'"

"And the feller took it and looked at it careful and turned it around this way and that and says: 'It's Well, what's he good for?'"

"Well," Smiley says, easy and careless, "he's good enough for one thing, I should judge. He can outjump any frog in Calaveras county."

"The feller took the box again and took another long, particular look and gave it back to Smiley and says very deliberate, 'Well, I don't see no points about that frog that's any better'n any other frog.'"

"Maybe you don't," Smiley says. "Maybe you understand frogs, and maybe you've had experience, and maybe you ain't only a amateur, as it were. Anyways I've got my opinion, and I'll risk $40 that he can outjump any frog in Calaveras county."

"And the feller studied a minute and then says kinder sidlike, 'Well, I'm only a stranger here, and I ain't got no frog, but if I had a frog I'd bet you.'"

"And then Smiley says: 'That's all right; that's all right. If you'll hold my box a minute I'll go and get you a frog.' And so the feller took the box and put up his $40 along with Smiley's and set down to wait."

"So he sat there a good while thinking and thinking to himself, and then he got the frog out and pried his mouth open and took a teaspoon and filled him full of quail shot, filled him pretty near up to his chin and set him on the floor. Smiley he went to the swamp and stopped around in the mud for a long time, and finally he fetched a frog and fetched him in and give him to this feller and says:

However, lacking both time and inclination, I did not wait to hear about the afflicted cow, but took my leave."

Now, if you're ready set him alongside of Dan's, with his forepaws just even with Dan's, and I'll give the word." Then he says, "One—two—three—go!" And him and the feller touched up the frogs from behind and the new frog hopped off lively, but Dan'd give a heave and hysted up his shoulders so, like a Frenchman, but it wasn't no use, he couldn't budge. He was planted as solid as a church, and he couldn't no more stir than if he was anchored out. Smiley was a good deal surprised, and he was disgusted, too, but he didn't have no idea what the matter was, of course.

"The feller took the money and started away, and when he was going out at the door he sorter jerked his thumb over his shoulder, so at Dan's, and says again, very deliberate, 'Well,' he says, 'I don't see no points about that frog that's any better'n any other frog.'"

"Smiley he stood scratching his head and looking down at Dan's a long time, and at last he says, 'I do wonder what in the nation that frog throw's off for! I wonder if there ain't something the matter with him! He 'pears to look mighty buggy somehow.' And he ketches Dan's by the nap of the neck and hefts him and says, 'Why, blame my cats, if he don't weigh five pound!' and turned him upside down, and he belked out a double handful of shot. And then he see how it was, and he was the maddest man. He set the frog down and took out after the feller, but he never ketched him, and"

"Here Simon Wheeler heard his name called from the front yard and got up to see what was wanted. Turning to me as he moved away, he said, 'Just set where you are, stranger, and rest easy. I ain't gon' to be gone a second.'"

But, by your leave, I did not think that a continuation of the history of the enterprising vagabond, Jim Smiley, would be likely to afford me much information concerning the Rev. Leonidas W. Smiley, and so I started away, returning and he buttonholed me and recommenced:

"Well, this yet Smiley had a yaller one eyed cow that didn't have no tail, only just a short stump like a bannan-ner, and"

UNITED BRETHREN TO HOLD ANNUAL REUNION

Will Gather at Lakemont Park, Near Altoona, August 13

United Brethren day will be observed at Lakemont park on Monday August 13 and great preparations are already being made for the annual event. The committee appointed has been successful in securing a number of prominent speakers for the day.

Many members of this denomination from churches throughout Central Pennsylvania are expected at the park for which an exceptionally fine program of sports and other amusements are being arranged.

Dinner will be served on the grounds by the Greenwood and Juniata churches while plans are being made for the comfort and pleasure of all those who attend.

The official program for the day has been completed and follows: Rev. E. G. Swanger, Tyrone, will deliver an address in the theatre where all the services of the day will be held, at 11 o'clock. At 11:30 o'clock Rev. Mrs. Spangler, one of the gifted women of the church, who is a minister herself and married to a minister will give a talk on the missions of the church. In the afternoon, Rev. J. S. Fulton, district superintendent Johnstown and Dr. C. W. Brumbaugh, Dayton, O., general secretary of the Sunday school board of the church, will make the principal address.

MEASURES OF FRUITS MUST BE ACCURATE

Persons Who Sell Fruits and Vegetables Must Obey Law

Because of his intense interest in horticultural development in Pennsylvania, State Zoologist H. A. Surface has received at his office in Harrisburg many questions concerning the so called "fruit package law." To answer these he has prepared the following reply giving needed information on the subject.

There is no distinct fruit package law in Pennsylvania, but there is a law applying to commodities sold in package form, and that is that they must have the quantity of the contents plainly and conspicuously marked on the outside of the package. Chief Sweeney, of the bureau of weights and measures, of the department of international affairs, says, "If you sell your peaches in a basket, the law defines that basket as a container when used for that purpose, therefore it will be necessary for you to mark the quantity of the contents on the outside of each package."

The law fixes forty-eight pounds as a standard of weight for a bushel of peaches. If your baskets are supposed to contain one-half bushel of peaches, then there should be twenty-four pounds in that basket.

If you are not able to put twenty-four pounds in the basket, then mark on the outside of the basket the exact amount contained therein.

The dealer who fails to comply with the requirements of the law, as above, subjects himself to the penalties imposed by the act.

It can be seen that the law is not made for the purpose of applying to fruits alone, and consequently is not a "fruit package law," although fruits come under the same regulations, in regard to marking packages, as do other commodities. Prosecutions are liable to follow the sale and delivery of short weights or measures.

The main point is that if the sale of a stipulated quantity of any material has been agreed upon, the amount delivered must be the net quantity of that commodity, not including the weight of the container, and if any material is put into a package for sale it must be marked the outside of that package the exact weight in measure of weight. The quantity of the material, expressed law fixes the weights of different

commodities named in this act as follows:

Alfalfa seed, sixty pounds.
Apples, fifty pounds.
Beans, dried, sixty pounds.
Beets, sixty pounds.
Buckwheat, forty-eight pounds.
Cabbage, fifty pounds.
Carrots, fifty pounds.
Cherries, with stems, fifty-six pounds.
Cherries, stemmed, sixty-four pounds.
Chestnuts, hulled, fifty pounds.
Corn, shelled, fifty-six pounds.
Corn ear (husked), seventy pounds.
Cucumbers, fifty pounds.
Currants, forty pounds.
Gooseberries, forty pounds.
Grapes, forty-eight pounds.
Onions, fifty pounds.
Onion sets, twenty-eight pounds.
Parsnips, fifty pounds.
Peaches, forty-eight pounds.
Pears, fifty pounds.
Peas, green (unshelled), fifty-six pounds.
Plums, sixty-four pounds.
Potatoes, sixty pounds.
Potatoes, (sweet), fifty-four pounds.
Raspberries, forty-eight pounds.
Rye, fifty-six pounds.
Strawberries, forty-eight pounds.
Tomatoes, sixty pounds.
Turnips, sixty pounds.

Fight or Surrender?

Carranza and his generals, through Consul Silliman, have notified the United States that the very letter of the plan of Guadalupe must be carried out. Carranza has gone to Tampico, where he can easily take steamer to Vera Cruz and proceed to the capital when Huerta flees. The rebel forces are converging against the city from the east, west and north. The stage is fully set for the last act. Whether this will be a peaceful and unconditional surrender or a last mad struggle against the inevitable is what is worrying officials.

BASEBALL AS PLAYED ON THE BRITISH ISLES

Batters Run Until Exhausted—
Score in One Game, 172 to 97

BY FRANK G. MENKE.

New York, July 15.—They played a game of baseball over on those dear, old British Isles some weeks ago, with the following result.

Innings.	1st	2nd	Total
Teams,	66	106	172
England	39	57	96

Game called on account of the general weariness of the players after the second inning.

Commenting on the attempt made by the Welsh gang to overcome a 133 run lead in their half of the second, one of English newspapers said:

The Welshmen never looked like making the 134 runs needed to win the game, but they tried hard. H. Evans, of the Grange gasworks, and E. Seer, of the Phil harriers, who was captain of the team, executed the most noble work, for they recorded 13 runs each, as the result of their labors, but the side was out in 57 runs. As we understand the situation, Messrs. Evans and Seer messed up the opposing pitcher to such an extent that they were given the privilege of running around the bases 13 times each and that divers and sundry other of their team-mates contributed the other 31 runs that were tallied during the final half inning of the pastime.

However, neither of the Welsh messrs. need get conceited about what they did. A few of their English opponents went them slightly better in the run making business. In the first inning L. Higgins made 15 runs and J. Baron 14, while in the second inning, Higgins contributed 25 runs and Barron aided his side by ambling around the bases 20 times.

One of our English brethren, who has been given the title of "base-ball expert" by the editor-in-chief of the paper in which he works, wrote an article about baseball after the aforementioned game was over. If you don't believe that this fellow is an expert on baseball and knows all the ins-and-outs of the said game, we submit evidence, the evidence being the article that he wrote in which he explained the game to those who didn't know much about it—and who perhaps don't know much more now.

Here is the article, in part:

"Baseball lacks the stately dignity of cricket. It is a strenuous and hustling, if not a highly skillful game. It has many merits. It should appeal to a public whose ideas have been speeded up by professional football. The impression that this match conveyed was that a splendid eye is needed for success as a batsman. The bat, which is no more than three and a half inches wide, is held at right angles to the body, chest high."

Then the expert goes on to describe some of the rules of the game. Here is the description of one rule, but it must be one they made in England. No one seems to know anything about it over here:

"A batter is allowed to miss only one ball, which the umpire passes as a good one. On a second offense he is ruled out."

Can anyone imagine what would happen if some umpire tried to "rule out" Heinie Zimmerman after he had taken only two swipes at the ball?

"The greatest excitement develops declares our English 'expert', 'when only two of three men remain not out, for then hard hitting and quick dashes to the home base become a necessity.'"

Our "expert" tosses bouquets at one of the English players named F. Moore, who made "five hits for four each in the first inning." In other words, Mr. Moore seems to have poked out four circuit smashes.

If he did, we'll go out "expert" in one stanza, one farther in the bouquet idea. We'll have a hot-house at Mr. Moore. He's got it coming if he did really execute these five home runs.

Continuing in his description, our "expert" assumes the populace that:

"Smart fielding and accurate returns to the various basemen are important features, but as the ball is nearly always in the air the necessity for a well cut and rolled field does not arise."

Judging from the number of runs made, it would be safe to assume that "the ball was nearly always in the air," and, no doubt, last seen when disappearing over the fence, in case they used fences in that game.

"An attractive feature of the game" we are told, "is that there is no waste of time. As each batsman makes his stroke and reaches first, second or home base, as the case may be, the next batter is ready to do his bowling."

Refreshments, in the form of tea, were served throughout the contest.

SPORTING NOTES

An Interesting Game.

Muncie shut out Winburne last evening on the latter's grounds by a score of 2-0. The game was one of the best witnessed in this section this season, and was free from any scrapping or objections to the umpire's decisions.

Not a score was made up to the ninth inning, when there were two men on bases, two men down and two strikes called on the batter. John Troup, Muncie's second baseman, who knocked a two-bagger and run in 2 scores. Battery—Winburne, Reed and Parks; Muncie, Swartz and Morarity.

WOODLAND WEDDING

Lloyd Coulter and Miss Hester Campman Happily Married.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. David Campman, of Woodland, was the scene of a very pleasant event at high noon on July 13, when their daughter, Miss Hester, became the wife of Lloyd Coulter, a son of Mrs. Susan Coulter, of Odessa, Pa. Maids of honor, Misses Oma Livergood and Pearl Barger. The marriage ceremony of the U. B. church was used by the bride's pastor, the Rev. E. G. Spessard. After the wishing of joy and happiness to the newly married couple by the many present, all were invited into the dining room to a table which, if it could speak for itself, would tell of the heavy burden under which it groaned.

Immediately after dinner the bride and groom were given an auto ride in the car of Isaac Connard, of Woodland. In the evening music was furnished by the young calichumpian orchestra of Woodland. A box of cigars was enjoyed, as well as ice cream and candy.

Those present: Mrs. Henry Turner and daughters Isabella and Evelyn and son Frank; Mrs. Robert Dougherty and daughter, Helen, of Clearfield; Mrs. Susan Coulter and Elmer Yeasay, of Odessa; Mrs. R. G. Barger, a sister of the bride, and son Raymond, of Gorton; Mrs. J. L. Miller, a sister of the bride, and daughters, Madeline and Helen, and sons, Kenneth, Russel and Walter, of Beach Creek; Mr. and Mrs. David Campman and daughter, Hazel and son, Burton; Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Connard, Mr. and Mrs. John Palmer, Mrs. H. N. Gilpatrick, Mrs. James Graffius, Mrs. Mary Cowder, Miss Oma Livergood, Lloyd Coulter, Rev. and Mrs. E. G. Spessard and daughters, Ruth, and Miss Pearl Barger, Mr. and Mrs. Arline, of Woodland.

They will take up their residence at Surveyor Run. All wish them a happy recollection of the day and a prosperous voyage through life.

It's pleasing to take—The Daily Progress.

Their Flight Proves That Dictator Will Resign

GENERAL VILLA IS VINDICTIVE

Rebel Leader Says He Hopes to Have the Pleasure of Executing Huerta—Carranza May Make an Attack on Mexico City After the Departure of the Provisional President—Rebels Marching on City.

(By International News Service)
Vera Cruz, July 15—It is regarded as absolutely certain there will be an end of the Huerta regime within 48 hours. This conclusion is based on the fact that Huerta has permitted his trusted Twenty-ninth regiment to accompany Mrs. Huerta and family as refugees in the exodus from Mexico City.

General Funston believes that the fleeing Huerta party, instead of coming here, will probably switch to Cordova, thence to Puerto, Mexico.

Developments in Mexico City have caused all Mexicans to believe that the dictator has definitely decided to abdicate. They believe his departure from the capital is only a matter of hours.

Villa Wants to Execute Huerta.

Juarez, July 15—General Villa arrived here today and will remain 10 days. He is arranging for the shipment of arms, which are necessary at the front.

"I hope Huerta won't flee," said Villa, "I want the pleasure of executing him."

Villa received a dispatch from General Orbeon, reporting the seizure of 4000 rifles, 1000 cavalry horses and 500,000 pesos belonging to federalists when he captured Guadalajara. Orbeon's prisoners now total 6000.

Carranza is Defiant.

Washington, July 15—Mexico City is to fall before the onslaught of armed Constitutionalists, it was feared here Tuesday. Carranza's defiant attitude, officials think, makes any other solution impossible unless a marked change occurs in 48 hours. As a result the United States will be forced to assume responsibility for what the immediate future holds for not alone the Mexicans themselves, but for the

TWO MEMBERS OF JURY RESIGN

Sheriff Pettit Resolves a Letter in Which a Bookster Mrs. Amos That He Fired the Shot Which Caused the Death of Mrs. Louise Bailey—Says He Was Stagnated as Woman.

(By International News Service)

New York, July 15—Two members of the Nassau county grand jury investigating the murder of Mrs. Louise Bailey withdrew because of their strong personal friendship for Dr. and Mrs. Carman. Alvah R. Smith and Daniel Rayner, the two who resigned, told Prosecutor Smith that the friends of their friendship would bias their judgment.

Detectives are seeking two witnesses to support the story of Cecilia Coleman, the Carman negro maid, that immediately following the shooting of Mrs. Bailey, Mrs. Carman rushed into the kitchen, "all excited and out of breath." The two missing witnesses are said to be women, who fled from Dr. Carman's waiting room when the shot was fired.

Mrs. Carman is on the verge of a nervous collapse and it is unlikely that Prosecutor Smith will permit her, as she requested to go before the grand jury with her story.

Attorney Levy, Mrs. Carman's counsel, declared he would confront the grand jury tomorrow with evidence tending to destroy the effectiveness of E. T. Barden's story that he saw a woman corresponding to Mrs. Carman rushing toward the Carman kitchen after the shooting.

Man Says He Shot Mrs. Bailey.
Harry De Beau testified to seeing Mrs. Bailey enter Dr. Carman's office on the night of the tragedy. While De Beau was testifying Sheriff Pettit received a letter from Rochester, N. Y., in which a man wrote that he killed Mrs. Bailey.

Dr. Carman, he wrote had broken up his home. Resolving on revenge, he visiting the Carman office and, dressed as a woman, fired the fatal shot. The sheriff said: "The letter was apparently written by a crank."

Mrs. Helen Corey, relative of Mrs. Carman is one of the missing woman witnesses so badly needed by the prosecution.

After his sermon he asked people to come down the aisle and allow Jesus to come into their lives. Sixty-one people, 47 of them men came and promised to live Christians lives, making a total of 1025 converts since the beginning of the meetings. The Evangelistic party left this morning for Mount Union, where they will continue their work.

Negress Gives Damaging Evidence Before Grand Jury

TWO MEMBERS OF JURY RESIGN

Which a Rochester Man Asserts That He Fired the Shot Which Caused the Death of Mrs. Louise Bailey—Says He Was Disguised as Woman.

(By International News Service)
New York, July 15—Two members of the Nassau county grand jury investigating the murder of Mrs. Louise Bailey withdrew because of their strong personal friendship for Dr. and Mrs. Carman. Alvah R. Smith and Daniel Rayner, the two who resigned, told Prosecutor Smith that the feared of their friendship would bias their judgment.

Detectives are seeking two witnesses to support the story of Cecilia Coleman, the Carman negro maid, that immediately following the shooting of Mrs. Bailey, Mrs. Carman rushed into the kitchen, "all excited and out of breath." The two missing witnesses are said to be women, who fled from Dr. Carman's waiting room when the shot was fired.

Mrs. Carman is on the verge of a nervous collapse and it is unlikely that Prosecutor Smith will permit her, as she requested to go before the grand jury with her story.

Attorney Levy, Mrs. Carman's counsel, declared he would confront the grand jury tomorrow with evidence tending to destroy the effectiveness of E. T. Bardee's story that he saw a woman corresponding to Mrs. Carman rushing toward the Carman kitchen after the shooting.

Man Says He Shot Mrs. Bailey.
Harry De Beau testified to seeing Mrs. Bailey enter Dr. Carman's office on the night of the tragedy. While De Beau was testifying Sheriff Pettit received a letter from Rochester, N. Y., in which a man wrote that he killed Mrs. Bailey.

Dr. Carman, he wrote had broken up his home. Resolving on revenge, he visited the Carman office and, dressed as a woman, fired the fatal shot. The sheriff said: "The letter was apparently written by a crank."

Mrs. Helen Corey, relative of Mrs. Carman is one of the missing women witnesses so badly needed by the prosecution.

WHAT?

What would you do if you were in Huerta's place?

Good evening! Certainly, you are going to help the Labor Day celebration along.

A MORAL TOWN.

It is gratifying to learn that the carnival which is now showing in Clearfield is not as black as it was painted in a letter sent to a Philadelphia newspaper by a Milton correspondent. Milton, by the way, must have reformed in its morals within the past decade if its citizens now rise up to denounce anything in the line of carnivals. Clearfield is not ready to welcome managers of gambling devices and the story which reached here anent the carnival was such an one as to arouse the anxiety of the good people of the town.

An investigation of the devices used by the carnival to amuse the public has been made by the borough authorities, who pronounce the entertainment offered as innocent of the terrible charge brought against the managers. With this guarantee from the borough fathers and legal department the people who enjoy carnival amusements need not be afraid that they will be shocked by anything which might transpire on the carnival grounds, unless it be the conduct of a few members of the home-talent troupe of jokers who have not yet fallen under the influence of the era of morality which exists here.

That the borough authorities, police department and others who have the moral welfare of the town in their keeping should regard it as their duty to investigate the carnival proves that Clearfield is populated by people who are jealous of their good name. No performance which is not sanctioned by the rules of decency will find it possible to attract the citizens of Clearfield. The town's own people are law-abiding, and they are not inclined to permit their sons and their daughters to be led into temptation under any circumstances.

NEW HAVEN LOOTING.

The story of the looting of the New Haven railroad property, as found in the report of the interstate commerce commission, should not startle the people. There is scarcely a railroad property in the United States which has not suffered seriously through the weak-mindedness of its directors and the peculations of its officers. The New Haven road was managed in the interests of the money gamblers, not in the interests of the stockholders. The law may not be able to punish the directors of the New Haven road because of the statute of limitations, but the law, through the interstate commerce commission, should get after the directors of other railroads and other big business concerns and either cause these directors to make good the thefts which have been committed or send them to the penitentiary. The worst feature of the proven crimes of the men at the head of the New Haven affairs is that President Wilson is willing to take their advice in planning his financial legislation.

A Barnesboro lad of eight years was killed by a trap set by a merchant of the town whose candy case had been robbed several times. The little fellow with a sweet tooth is dead, and the merchant no doubt regrets that a human life was sacrificed that his sweets might be safe.

And there are a number of postoffices in this neck of woods presided over by Republicans. That's what makes our Democratic friends so hot under the collar.

It is shown that the month of June produces a larger number of weddings and unities of any month in the year. You can draw your own conclusions.

Dr. Brumbaugh's silence on the issues of the campaign will prevent anybody yelling for him after the election of Dean Lewis.

IN THE MOVIES

The twelfth series of "Lucile Love" shows that Lucile has gained possession of the priceless documents, still she is in a more dangerous position than ever before. She finds herself Hugo Lobeque's prisoner in his own house in San Francisco. Her position is especially dangerous because Lobeque is now extremely tired of the bother she has caused him. She realizes that he is now in deadly earnest, and when he demands the return of the papers she hands them over to him in fright and misgiving. When man is aroused to his fullest capacity there is nothing he will not stop at. Lucile realizes this intuitively.

A fortunate incident to divert Lobeque's anger occurs when Thompson the crook-baiter, enters Lucile accuses him of stealing her jewels and takes them from his pocket to prove it. The spy's anger and impatience finds vent on the butler and he knocks him senseless.

While she is waiting for her fate to be decided, Lucile sees her lover, Lieutenant Gibson, coming to her rescue. However, Lobeque sees him almost as soon as she does and gives an order to his servants to prepare for the attack. Lieutenant Gibson, however, is as quick in action as Lobeque and forces his way into the house. Lucile is carried away by Lobeque's men and hid in a tunnel. Lobeque, although forced to surrender to Gibson, leaning against a secret door, escapes. Lucile makes a plan with the butler—who resolves to leave Lobeque—by which they will both escape. Lobeque is suspicious and watches them and catches Thompson, but Lucile escapes in the automobile with the valuable papers. Then Lobeque gives the order to his men "Shoot! But don't shoot to kill!"

The greatest love story of the ages "Anthony and Cleopatra," has been staged in Rome. The story is the familiar one made immortal by Shakespeare, of Marc Anthony and his infatuation for Cleopatra. A Roman, Anthony Novella, a fine manly fellow, worthy of the love of the real Cleopatra, played the part of Anthony. Jeane Ferrielle, also a Roman, played the part of Cleopatra, and so well has she played good after trials, and the monied men of Clearfield will be very careful not to encourage any wildcat scheme promoted by unreliable or impractical men.

Future Looks Bright.
 With the revival of business which is anticipated within the next two months it is expected that Clearfield will be among the towns which will be benefited by the restoration of confidence expected to ensue.

The big tile company which has been favorably impressed with the natural resources and other inducements which Clearfield offers is expected to renew its negotiations for a suitable site here, and the Chamber of Commerce is only awaiting the upward trend of business to begin an active campaign for new industries of a substantial character which seek just what this town has to offer.

Parable of Life.

There is a wireless telegraph apparatus in a certain home and the boys explain that they can only receive but not send. It takes power to send, and power costs. So they fling out their aerial to catch messages from far and near, and never send a message in return. The incident is a parable of life.

it that critics all over the world are saying that greater men than Anthony might easily forget all else for Cleopatra. The play has the warmth and life of a spoken play. 75,000 people have been used in the staging of it. We are carried back to the days of old Rome and its mode of life in the pictures. This is one of the special features booked ahead at the New opera house. It will be shown on the evening of August 25.

Robert Leonard, actor and director of Rex dramas, has just completed a one reel subject which he considers to be the most beautiful and effective drama he has ever acted in or produced. It is "The Symphony of Souls" and tells the story of a young and poor violinist who plays to himself, little dreaming that each note is eagerly absorbed by a sightless girl who lives across the hall. The story plays between the palace of the rich and the hovels of the exceeding poor. Every action in it has the convincing mark of truth, and the drama, as a whole, is fully worthy of the ambitious title.

"Prince Willie" and "Natty and his Father" are two hand-colored comedies that will be shown at the opera house tonight. Willie and his many funny incidents have always been popular with an audience. They are so full of good, clean fun, that it will be welcomed gladly.

Great Britain won the first two singles matches in the second round for the Dwight F. Davis lawn tennis cup against France at Wimbledon. The Englishmen played a steadier game than their opponents, who occasionally showed flashes of brilliancy.

Exterminate the Cockroach.

The cockroach acts as an insect porter of typhoid fever, bubonic plague and possibly cancer. Several years ago an epidemic of typhoid fever on a United States warship was proved to be propagated by cockroaches. In a recent issue of the London Lancet, Dr. W. Melville Davidson calls attention to the fact that the cause of cancer may be an alga or vegetable micro-organism which is found in the intestines of several species of roaches.

The Adventures of Kathlyn

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Illustrated by Pictures from the Moving Picture Production of the Selig Polyscope Co.

(Copyright by Harold MacGrath)

Umballa shrugged and repeated her words. Here the Council of Three interposed, warning Kathlyn that she must submit to the law as it read. There was no appeal from it.

"Then I shall appeal to the British raj."

"How?" asked Umballa, urbanely.

Swiftly she stepped to the front of the platform and extended her arms. It was an appeal. She pointed to Umballa and shook her head. Her arms went out again. A low murmur rippled over the pressing crowd; it grew in volume; and a frown of doubt flitted over Umballa's brow. The soldiers were swaying restlessly. Kathlyn saw this sign and was quick to seize upon its possibilities. She renewed her gesture toward them. It seemed that she must burst forth in their mad dening tongue: "I appeal to the chivalry of Allah!"

Soldiers, you now wear my uniform! Liberate me! But her tongue was mute; yet her eyes, her face, her arms spoke eloquently enough to the turbulent soldiers. Besides, they welcomed the opportunity to show the populace how strong they were and how little they feared Umballa. At a nod from their leader they came romping up the steps to the dais and surrounded Kathlyn. A roar came from the populace; an elephant trumpeted; the parish dogs barked.

Umballa stepped back, his hand on his jeweled sword. He was quite unprepared for any such flagrant mutiny—mutiny from his angle of vision, though in law the troopers had only responded to the desire of their queen. He turned questioning to the Council and the priests. He himself could move no further. His conferees appreciated the danger in which their power stood. They announced that it was decreed to give the queen a respite of seven days in which to yield. It would at least hold the bold troopers on the leash till they could be brought to see the affair in its true light by the way of largess in rupees. Umballa consented because he was at the bottom of the sack. A priest read from a scroll the law, explaining that no woman might rule unmarred. Because the young queen was not conversant with the laws of the state she would be given seven days. Thus the durbar ended.

With a diplomacy which would have graced a better man Umballa directed the troopers to escort Kathlyn to her chamber in the zenana. He had in mind seven days. Many things could be accomplished in that space of time. "For the present," he said, smiling at Kathlyn, "the God of your fathers has proven strongest. But tomorrow! Ah, tomorrow! There will be seven days. Think then, deeply and wisely. Your khitmatgar Rao is a prisoner. It will be weeks ere your presence is known here. You are helpless as a bird in the net. Struggle if you will; you will only bruise your wings. The British raj? The British raj does not want a great border war, and I can bring down ten thousand wild hill men outlaws between whom and the British raj there is a blood feud; ten thousand from a land where there is never peace, only truce. In seven days. Salaam, heaven born!"

She returned his ironical gaze calmly over the shoulder of a trooper.

"Wait," she said. "I wish you to understand the enormity of your crime."

"Crime?" with elevated eyebrows.

"Yes. You have abducted me."

"No. You came of your own free will."

"The white men of my race will not pause to argue over any such subtlety. Marry you? I do not like your color."

A dull red settled under Umballa's skin.

"I merely wish to warn you," she went on, "that my blood will be upon your head. And were to you if it is. There are white men who will not await the coming of the British raj."

"Ah, yes; some brave, hardy American; Bruce Sahib, for instance. Alas, he is in the straits settlements! Seven days."

"I am not afraid to die."

"But there are many kinds of death," and with this sinister reflection he stepped aside.

The multitude, seeing Kathlyn coming down from the dais, still surrounded by her cordon of troopers, began reluctantly to disperse. "Bread and the circus!"—the mobs will cry it down the ages; they will always pause to witness bloodshed, from a safe distance, you may be sure. There was a deal of rioting in the bazaars that night, and many a measure of bhag and toddy kept the fires burning. Oriental politics is like the winds of the equinox: it blows from all directions.

The natives were taxed upon every conceivable subject, not dissimilar to the old days in Urdu, where a man paid so much for the privilege of squeezing the man under him. Mutiny was afoot, rebellion, but it had not yet found a head. The natives wanted a change, something to gossip about during the hot, lazy afternoons, over their hookahs and coffee. To them reform meant change only, not the alleviation of some of their heavy burdens. The talk of freeing slaves was but talk; slaves were lucrative investments; a man would be a fool to free them. An old man, with a skin white like this new queen's and hair like spun wool, dressed in a long black cloak and a broad-brimmed hat, had started the agitation of liberating the slaves. More than that, he carried no idol of his God, never bathed in the ghats, or took flowers to the temples, and seemed always silently communing with the simple iron cross suspended from his neck. But he had died during the last visitation of the plague.

They had wearied of their tolerant king, who had died mysteriously; they were now wearied of the council and Umballa; in other words, they knew not what they wanted, being People.

Who was this fair-skinned woman who stood so straight before Umballa's eye? Whence had she come? To be ruled by a woman who appeared to be tongue-tied! Well, there were worse things than a woman who could not talk. Thus they gabbled in the bazaars, round braziers and dung fires. And some talked of the murder. The proud Ramabai had been hailed to prison; his banker's gold had not saved him. O, this street rat Umballa generally got what he wanted. Ramabai's wife was one of the beauties of Hind.

Through the narrow, evil smelling streets of the bazaars a man hurried that night, glancing behind frequently to see if by any mischance some one followed. He stopped at the house of Lal Singh, the shoemaker, whom he found drowsing over his water pipe.

"Is it well?" said the newcomer, intoning.

"It is well," answered Lal Singh, dropping the mouthpiece of his pipe. He had spoken mechanically. When he saw who his visitor was his eyes brightened. "Ahmed?"

"Hush!" with a gesture toward the ceiling.

"She is out merrymaking, like the rest of her kind. The old saying: if a man waits, the woman comes to him. I am alone. There is news?"

"There is a journey. Across Hind to Simla."

"The hour has arrived?"

"At least the excuse. Give these to one in authority with the British raj, whose bread we eat." Ahmed slid across the table a very small scroll.

"The mumsabib is my master's daughter. She must be spirited away to safety."

"Ah!" Lal Singh rubbed his fat hands. "So the time nears when we shall wring the vulture's neck. Al! it is good! Umballa, the toad, who swells and swells as the days go by. Shiva has guarded him well. The king picks him out of the gutter for a pretty bit of impudence, sends him afar to Umballa, where he learns to wear shoes, that button and stiff linen bands round the neck. He has gone on, gone on! The higher up, the harder the fall."

"The cellar?"

"The cellar?"

"The cellar?"

"The cellar?"

"The cellar?"

These two men were spiders in that great web of secret service that the British raj weaves up and down and across Hind, to Persia and Afghanistan, to the borders of the Bear.

Even as Lal Singh picked up his mouthpiece again and Ahmed saluted forth into the bazaars Umballa had brought to him in the armory that company of soldiers who had shown such open mutiny, not against the state, but against him.

Gravely he questioned the captain.

"Pay our wages, then, heaven born."

"Ah, your majesty!" interposed Umballa. Pundita he did not mind, but he objected to Ramabai, secretly knowing him to be a revolutionist, extremely popular with the people and the nearby ryots (farmers), to whom he loaned money upon reasonable terms.

"If I am queen, I will it," said Kathlyn firmly. "If I am only a prisoner, and the force at once."

"Your majesty's word is law," and Umballa bowed, hiding as best he could his irritation.

The next afternoon he began to enact the subtle plans he had formed regarding Kathlyn. He brought her certain documents and petitions to sign and went over them carefully with her. Once, as she returned a document, he caught her hand and kissed it. She withdrew it roughly, flaming with anger. He spread his hands apologetically. He was on fire for her, but he possessed admirable control. He had the right to come and go; as regard he could enter the zenana without being accompanied by the council. But, thereafter, when he arrived with the day's business she contrived to have Pundita near and Ramabai within call. On the sixth day he cast all discretion to the winds and seized her violently in his arms. And, though she defended her lips, her cheeks and neck were defiled. She stepped back; the hidden dagger flashed.

"A step nearer," she cried, low voiced, "and I will strike."

Umballa recoiled. This was no longer Sa'adi's hour, but the young woman who had mastered the lion in the railway train. Rago supplanted the passion in his heart. Since she would not bend, she should break. As her arm sank he sprang forward like a cat and seized her wrist. He was not gentle. The dagger tinkled as it struck the marble floor. He stooped for it.

"Since you will not bend, break!" he said, and left the chamber, cold with fury.

Kathlyn sank weakly upon her pillows as Pundita ran to her side.

"What shall I do, Pundita?"

"God knows, mumsabib!"

"Are you a Christian?"

"Yes."

And so they comforted each other. There was a garden in the palace grounds, lovely indeed. A fountain tinkled and fat carp swam about in the fluted basin. There were trellises of flowers, too; Persian roses, despite the fact that it was still winter. It was called the Garden of Brides.

Kathlyn, attended by Pundita, awaited there the coming of Umballa and the Council. Her heart ached with bitterness and she could not think clearly. The impression that all this was some dreadful nightmare recurred to her vividly. What terrors awaited her she knew not nor could conceive. Marry that smiling demon?—for something occult told her that he was a demon. No; she was ready to die.

And but a little while ago she had been working happily in the outdoor studio; the pet leopard sprawled at her feet; from the bungalow she heard the nightingale voice of Winnie, soaring in some aria of Verdi's; her father was dozing on the veranda. Out of that, into this! It was incredible. From time to time she brushed her forehead, bewildered.

In this mood, bordering on the hysterical (which is sometimes but a step to supreme courage), Durga Ram, so-called Umballa, and the Council found enmity too far. As a matter of fact he no longer cared about her, at least not since his arrival at the Hare wild animal farm in California.

"Where is this man Ramabai confined?" demanded Kathlyn.

"In the murderers' pit in the elephant arena."

"Send and bring him here. I am certain that he is innocent."

So they brought in Ramabai in chains. Behind him came a Nautch girl, at whom Umballa gazed, puzzled. What part had she in this affair? He soon found out.

"Who are you?" he asked.

"I am Lalla Ghori, and I live over the shoemaker, Lal Singh, in the Kash-nir Gate bazaar. I dance."

"And why are you here?"

"I saw the murder. Ramabai is innocent. He came upon the scene only after the murderer had fled. They were fighting about me," naively. "I was afraid to tell till now."

"Knock off these chains," said Kathlyn. Of Pundita she asked: "Does he, too, speak English?"

"Yes, heaven born."

"Then for the present he shall become my bodyguard. You shall both remain here in the palace."

"Ah, your majesty!" interposed Umballa. Pundita he did not mind, but he objected to Ramabai, secretly knowing him to be a revolutionist, extremely popular with the people and the nearby ryots (farmers), to whom he loaned money upon reasonable terms.

"If I am queen, I will it," said Kathlyn firmly. "If I am only a prisoner, and the force at once."

Umballa recoiled. This was no longer Sa'adi's hour, but the young woman who had mastered the lion in the railway train. Rago supplanted the passion in his heart. Since she would not bend, she should break. As her arm sank he sprang forward like a cat and seized her wrist. He was not gentle. The dagger tinkled as it struck the marble floor. He stooped for it.

"Since you will not bend, break!" he said, and left the chamber, cold with fury.

Kathlyn sank weakly upon her pillows as Pundita ran to her side.

"What shall I do, Pundita?"

"God knows, mumsabib!"

"Are you a Christian?"

"Yes."

And so they comforted each other. There was a garden in the palace grounds, lovely indeed. A fountain tinkled and fat carp swam about in the fluted basin. There were trellises of flowers, too; Persian roses, despite the fact that it was still winter. It was called the Garden of Brides.

Kathlyn, attended by Pundita, awaited there the coming of Umballa and the Council. Her heart ached with bitterness and she could not think clearly. The impression that all this was some dreadful nightmare recurred to her vividly. What terrors awaited her she knew not nor could conceive. Marry that smiling demon?—for something occult told her that he was a demon. No; she was ready to die.

And but a little while ago she had been working happily in the outdoor studio; the pet leopard sprawled at her feet; from the bungalow she heard the nightingale voice of Winnie, soaring in some aria of Verdi's; her father was dozing on the veranda. Out of that, into this! It was incredible. From time to time she brushed her forehead, bewildered.

In this mood, bordering on the hysterical (which is sometimes but a step to supreme courage), Durga Ram, so-called Umballa, and the Council found enmity too far. As a matter of fact he no longer cared about her, at least not since his arrival at the Hare wild animal farm in California.

"Where is this man Ramabai confined?" demanded Kathlyn.

"In the murderers' pit in the elephant arena."

"Send and bring him here. I am certain that he is innocent."

So they brought in Ramabai in chains. Behind him came a Nautch girl, at whom Umballa gazed, puzzled. What part had she in this affair? He soon found out.

"Who are you?" he asked.

"I am Lalla Ghori, and I live over the shoemaker, Lal Singh, in the Kash-nir Gate bazaar. I dance."

"And why are you here?"

"I saw the murder. Ramabai is innocent. He came upon the scene only after the murderer had fled. They were fighting about me," naively. "I was afraid to tell till now."

"Knock off these chains," said Kathlyn. Of Pundita she asked: "Does he, too, speak English?"

"Yes, heaven born."

"Then for the present he shall become my bodyguard. You shall both remain here in the palace."

"Ah, your majesty!" interposed Umballa. Pundita he did not mind, but he objected to Ramabai, secretly knowing him to be a revolutionist, extremely popular with the people and the nearby ryots (farmers), to whom he loaned money upon reasonable terms.

"If I am queen, I will it," said Kathlyn firmly. "If I am only a prisoner, and the force at once."

"Your majesty's word is law," and Umballa bowed, hiding as best he could his irritation.

The next afternoon he began to enact the subtle plans he had formed regarding Kathlyn. He brought her certain documents and petitions to sign and went over them carefully with her. Once, as she returned a document, he caught her hand and kissed it. She withdrew it roughly, flaming with anger. He spread his hands apologetically. He was on fire for her, but he possessed admirable control. He had the right to come and go; as regard he could enter the zenana without being accompanied by the council. But, thereafter, when he arrived with the day's business she contrived to have Pundita near and Ramabai within call. On the sixth day he cast all discretion to the winds and seized her violently in his arms. And, though she defended her lips, her cheeks and neck were defiled. She stepped back; the hidden dagger flashed.

"A step nearer," she cried, low voiced, "and I will strike."

Umballa recoiled. This was no longer Sa'adi's hour, but the young woman who had mastered the lion in the railway train. Rago supplanted the passion in his heart. Since she would not bend, she should break. As her arm sank he sprang forward like a cat and seized her wrist. He was not gentle. The dagger tinkled as it struck the marble floor. He stooped for it.

"Since you will not bend, break!" he said, and left the chamber, cold with fury.

Kathlyn sank weakly upon her pillows as Pundita ran to her side.

"What shall I do, Pundita?"

"God knows, mumsabib!"

"Are you a Christian?"

"Yes."

And so they comforted each other. There was a garden in the palace grounds, lovely indeed. A fountain tinkled and fat carp swam about in the fluted basin. There were trellises of flowers, too; Persian roses, despite the fact that it was still winter. It was called the Garden of Brides.

her. The face of the former was old, his eyes steady and expressionless.

"Has your majesty decided?" asked the eldest of the Council.

"Yes," quietly.

"And your decision is?"

"No, absolutely and finally. There is no reason why I should obey any of your laws; but there is a good reason why all of you shall some day be punished for this outrage."

"Outrage! To be made queen of Al-laha?" The spokesman for the Council stamped his foot in wrath.

"Think!" said Umballa.

"I have thought. Let us have no more of this cat-and-mouse play. I refuse to marry you. I'd much prefer any beggar in the street. There is nothing more to be said."

"There are worse things than marriage."

"What manner of indignities have you arranged for me?" Her voice was firm, but the veins in her throat beat so hard that they stifled her.

Said the spokesman of the council: "We have found a precedent. We find that one hundred and ninety years ago a like case confused the Council of that day. They finally agreed that she must submit to two ordeals with wild beasts of the jungle. If she survived she was to be permitted to rule without hindrance. It would be a matter for the gods to decide."

"Are you really human beings?" asked Kathlyn, her lips dry. "Can you possibly commit such a dreadful crime against one who has never harmed you, who asks for nothing but the freedom to leave this country?"

Pundita secretly caught Kathlyn's hand and pressed it.

"Once more!" said Umballa, his compassion touched for the first time. But he had gone too far; for the safety of his own head he must go on.

"I am ready!"

The four men saluted gravely. They turned, the flowing yellow robes of the Council fluttering in the wind, the sun lighting with green and red fires the bit of Umballa's sword. Not one of them but would have emptied his private coffers to undo what he had done. It was too late. Already a priest had announced the ordeals to the swarming populace. You feed a tiger to pacify him; you give a populace a spectacle.

That night Umballa did not rest particularly well. But he became determined upon one thing; no actual harm should befall Kathlyn. He would have a marksman hidden nearby in both ordeals. What a woman! She was a queen, and he knew that he would go through all the bells of Hind to call her his. Long ere this he would have looted the treasure chests and swept her up on his racing elephant had he dared. Sa'adi's hour!

A thousand times he heard it through the night:

"I am ready!"

CHAPTER IV.

The Two Ordeals.

Meantime Lal Singh was hurrying on a racing camel toward the railway, toward Simla, more than a thousand miles away. He was happy. Here was the long delayed opportunity for the hand of the British raj; a captive white woman. What better excuse was needed? There would be armed Sikhs and Gurkas and Tommies near Rawal Pindi. At how time moved, how fate twisted! How the finest built castle in schemes came clattering down! At the very moment when through the night:

"I am ready!"

"I am ready!"

"I am ready!"

"I am ready!"

"I am ready!"

"I am ready!"

"I am ready!"

"I am ready!"

"I am ready!"

"I am ready!"

"I am ready!"

"I am ready!"

"I am ready!"

"I am ready!"

"I am ready!"

BIG EATERS GET KIDNEY TROUBLE

Take Sals at first sign of Bladder irritation or Backache.

The American men and women must guard constantly against Kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidney tries to filter out, they weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy nervous spells, acid stomach, or have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Sals; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys; to neutralize the acids in the urine, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Sals is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage, and because it is in every home, because no body can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

Something Good for your supper

"That may be," says Billy Fish, "and yet I should be sorry if it was." He sinks his head upon his great fur cloak for a minute and thinks "King," says he, "be you man or god or devil, I'll stick by you today. I have twenty of my men with me, and they will follow me. We'll go to Bashkal until the storm blows over."

"A little snow had fallen in the night and everything was white except the greasy fat clouds that blew down and down from the north. Dravot came out with his crown on his head, swinging his arms and stamping his feet and looking more pleased than Punch."

"For the last time, drop it, Dan," says I in a whisper. "Billy Fish here says there will be a row."

"A row among my people?" says Dravot. "Not much. Peuchey, you're a fool not to get a wife too. Where's the girl?" says he with a voice as loud as the braying of a jackass. "Call up all the chiefs and priests and let the emperor see if his wife suits him."

"There was no need to call any one. They were all there leaning on their guns and spears round the clearing in the center of the pine wood. A deputation of priests went down to the little empire to bring up the girl, and the horns blew up fit to wake the dead. Billy Fish saunters round and gets as close to Daniel as he could, and behind him stood his twenty men with matchlocks, not a man of them under six feet. I was next to Dravot, and behind me was twenty men of the regular army. Up comes the girl, and a strapping wench she was, covered with silver and turquoise, but white as death and looking back every minute at the priests."

"She'll do," said Dan, looking her over. "What's to be afraid of, lass? Come and kiss me." He puts his arm round her. She shuts her eyes, gives a bit of a squeak, and down goes her face in the side of Dan's flaming red beard.

"The girl's bitten me!" says he, clapping his hand to his neck, and sure enough his hand was red with blood. Billy Fish and two of his matchlock men catches hold of Dan by the shoulders and drags him into the Bashkal lot, while the priests howl in their lingo, "Neither God nor devil, but a man!" I was all taken aback, for a priest cut at me in front, and the army behind began firing into the Bashkal men.

"I tried to give some sort of orders to my men—the men of the regular army—but it was no use, so I fired into the brown of 'em with an English Martini and drilled three beggars in a line. The valley was full of shouting, howling creatures, and every soul was shrieking. 'Not a God nor a devil, but only a man!' The Bashkal troops stuck to Billy Fish all they were worth, but their matchlocks wasn't half as good as the Kabul breechloaders, and four of them dropped."

"We can't stand," says Billy Fish. "Make a run for it down the valley. The whole place is against us." There wasn't more than six men, not counting Dan, Billy Fish and me, that came down to the bottom of the valley alive. "My own notion is that Dan began to go mad in his head from that hour. He stared up and down like a stuck pig. Then he was all for walking back alone and killing the priests with his bare hands, which he could have done. 'An emperor am I,' says Daniel, 'and next year I shall be a knight of the queen.'"

"All right, Dan," says I, "but come along now while there's time."

"It's your fault," says he, "for not looking after your army better." I was too heartsick to care, though it was all his foolishness that brought the smash. "I'm sorry, Dan," says I, "but there's no accounting for natives. 'This business is our Fifty-seven. Maybe we'll make something out of it yet, when we've got to Bashkal.'"

"Let's get to Bashkal then," says Dan, "and when I come back here again I'll sweep the valley so there isn't a bug in a blanket left."

"We walked all that day, and all that night Dan was stumping up and down on the snow, chewing his beard and muttering to himself."

"There's no hope of getting clear," said Billy Fish. "The priests will have sent runners to the villages to say that you are only men. Why didn't you stick on as gods till things were more settled? I'm a dead man," says Billy Fish, and he throws himself down on the snow and begins to pray to his gods."

"Next morning we was in a cruel bad country—all up and down, no level ground at all and no food either. The six Bashkal men looked at Billy Fish hungrywise as if they wanted to ask something, but they said never a word. At noon we came to the top of a flat mountain all covered with snow, and when we climbed up into it, behold there was an army in position waiting in the middle!"

"The runners have been very quick," says Billy Fish, with a little bit of a laugh. "They are waiting for us."

"We're done for," says Dan. "They are Englishmen, these people, and it's my blasted nonsense that has brought you to this. Get back, Billy Fish, and take your men away; you've done what you could, and now cut for it. Carnahan," says he, "shake hands with me and go along with Billy. Maybe they won't kill you. I'll go and meet 'em alone. It's me, the king, that did it."

"Go!" says I. "I'm with you here Billy Fish, you clear out, and we two will meet those folk."

"I'm a chief," says Billy Fish, and quiet. "I stay with you. My men can go."

"The Bashkal fellows didn't wait for a second word," but ran off. It was cold—awful cold. I've got that cold in the back of my head now. There's a lump of it there."

Carnahan was shivering, and I feared that his mind might go. I wiped my face, took a fresh grip of the pitifully mangled hands and said, "What happened after that?"

"What was you pleased to say?"

level he could get over more ground at one stride than any animal of his breed was his strong suit, you understand, and when it came to that Smiley would ante up money on him as long as he had a red. Smiley was monstrous proud of his frog, and well he might be, for fellers that had traveled and been everywhere all said he had over any frog that ever they see.

"Well, Smiley kept the beast in a little little box, and he used to fetch him downtown sometimes and lay for a bet. One day a feller—a stranger in the camp he was—came across him with his box and says:

"What might it be that you've got in the box?"

"And Smiley said, sorter indifferent like, 'It might be a parrot, or it might be a canary maybe, but it ain't—it's only just a frog.'"

"And the feller took it and looked at it careful and turned it around this way and that and says: 'It's a Well, what's he good for?'"

"Well," Smiley says, easy and careless, "he's good enough for one thing, I should judge. He can outjump any frog in Calaveras county."

"The feller took the box again and took another long, particular look and gave it back to Smiley and says very deliberate, 'Well, I don't see no points about that frog that's any better'n any other frog.'"

"Maybe you don't," Smiley says. "Maybe you understand frogs, and maybe you don't understand 'em. Maybe you've had experience, and maybe you ain't only a amateur, as it were. Anyway I've got my opinion, and I'll risk $40 that he can outjump any frog in Calaveras county."

"And the feller studied a minute and then says kinder sidlike, 'Well, I'm only a stranger here, and I ain't got no frog, but if I had a frog I'd bet you.'"

"And then Smiley says: 'That's all right; that's all right. If you'll hold my box a minute I'll go and get you a frog.' And so the feller took the box and put up his $40 along with Smiley's and set down to wait."

"So he sat there a good while thinking and thinking to himself, and then he got the frog out and pried his mouth open and took a teaspoon and filled him full of quail shot, filled him pretty near up to his chin and set him on the floor. Smiley he went to the swamp and stopped around in the mud for a long time, and finally he fetched a frog and fetched him in and gave him to this feller and says:

Now, if you're ready set him alongside of Dan's, with his forepaws just even with Dan's, and I'll give the word." Then he says, "One—two—three—go!" And him and the feller touched up the frogs from behind and the new frog hopped off lively, but Dan didn't give a heave and hysted up his shoulders so, like a Frenchman, but it wasn't no use, he couldn't budge. He was planted as solid as a church, and he couldn't no more stir than if he was anchored out. Smiley was a good deal surprised, and he was disgusted, too, but he didn't have no idea what the matter was, of course.

"The feller took the money and started away, and when he was going out at the door he sorter jerked his thumb over his shoulder, so at Dan's, and says again, very deliberate, 'Well,' he says, 'I don't see no points about that frog that's any better'n any other frog.'"

"Smiley he stood scratching his head and looking down at Dan's a long time, and at last he says, 'I do wonder what in the nation that frog throw's off for! I wonder if there ain't something the matter with him! He 'pears to look mighty buggy somehow.' And he ketches Dan's by the nap of the neck and hefts him and says, 'Why, blame my cats, if he don't weigh five pounds!' and turned him upside down, and he belked out a double handful of shot. And then he see how it was, and he was the maddest man. He set the frog down and took out after the feller, but he never ketched him, and—"

(Here Simon Wheeler heard his name called from the front yard and got up to see what was wanted.) Turning to me as he moved away, he said, "Just set where you are, stranger, and rest easy. I ain't gon' to be gone a second."

But, by your leave, I did not think that a continuation of the history of the enterprising vagabond, Jim Smiley, would be likely to afford me much information concerning the Rev. Leonidas W. Smiley, and so I started away, returning and he buttonholed me and recommenced:

"Well, this yer Smiley had a yaller one eyed cow that didn't have no tail, only just a short stump like a bannan-ner, and—"

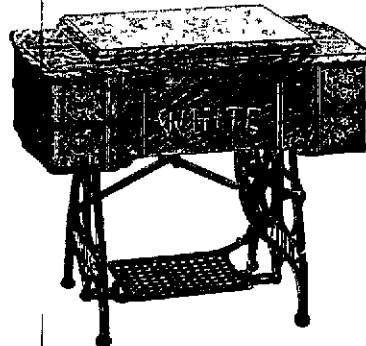

However, lacking both time and inclination, I did not wait to hear about the afflicted cow, but took my leave.

Health of the Mind.

To be made whole is to be healed in both body and mind. Bodily healing alone does not suffice, for unless there is a change of mind also disease will again manifest itself in some form in the body, and the second condition of the patient may become worse than the first. On the other hand a change of mind is quickly manifested in the body, and if we have been transformed by the renewing of our mind the change is quickly evidenced by the restoration of the body to health and harmony—Unity.

UNITED BRETHREN TO HOLD ANNUAL REUNION

Will Gather at Lakemont Park, Near Altoona, August 13

United Brethren day will be observed at Lakemont park on Monday August 13 and great preparations are already being made for the annual event. The committee appointed has been successful in securing a number of prominent speakers for the day.

Many members of this denomination from churches throughout Central Pennsylvania are expected at the park for which an exceptionally fine program of sports and other amusements are being arranged.

Dinner will be served on the grounds by the Greenwood and Juniata churches while plans are being made for the comfort and pleasure of all those who attend.

The official program for the day has been completed and follows: Rev. E. G. Swanger, Tyrone, will deliver an address in the theatre where all the services of the day will be held, at 11 o'clock. At 11:30 o'clock Rev. Mrs. Spangler, one of the gifted women of the church, who is a minister herself and married to a minister will give a talk on the missions of the church. In the afternoon, Rev. J. S. Fulton, district superintendent Johnstown and Dr. C. W. Brumbaugh, Dayton, O., general secretary of the Sunday school board of the church, will make the principal address.

MEASURES OF FRUITS MUST BE ACCURATE

Persons Who Sell Fruits and Vegetables Must Obey Law

Because of his intense interest in horticultural development in Pennsylvania, State Zoologist H. A. Surface has received at his office in Harrisburg many questions concerning the so called "fruit package law." To answer these he has prepared the following reply giving needed information on the subject.

There is no distinct fruit package law in Pennsylvania, but there is a law applying to commodities sold in package form, and that is that they must have the quantity of the contents plainly and conspicuously marked on the outside of the package. Chief Sweeney, of the bureau of weights and measures, of the department of international affairs, says, "If you sell your peaches in a basket, the law defines that basket as a container when used for that purpose, therefore it will be necessary for you to mark the quantity of the contents on the outside of each package."

The law fixes forty-eight pounds as a standard of weight for a bushel of peaches. If your baskets are supposed to contain one-half bushel of peaches, then there should be twenty-four pounds in that basket.

If you are not able to put twenty-four pounds in the basket, then mark on the outside of the basket the exact amount contained therein.

The dealer who fails to comply with the requirements of the law, as above, subjects himself to the penalties imposed by the act.

It can be seen that the law is not made for the purpose of applying to fruits alone, and consequently is not a "fruit package law," although fruits come under the same regulations, in regard to marking packages, as do other commodities. Prosecutions are liable to follow the sale and delivery of short weights or measures.

The main point is that if the sale of a stipulated quantity of any material has been agreed upon, the amount delivered must be the net quantity of that commodity, not including the weight of the container, and if any material is put into a package for sale it must be marked the outside of that package the exact weight in measure of weight. The quantity of the material, expressed law fixes the weights of different

commodities named in this act as follows:

Alfalfa seed, sixty pounds.
Apples, fifty pounds.
Beans, dried, sixty pounds.
Beets, sixty pounds.
Buckwheat, forty-eight pounds.
Cabbage, fifty pounds.
Carrots, fifty pounds.
Cherries, with stems, fifty-six pounds.
Cherries, stemmed, sixty-four pounds.
Chestnuts, hulled, fifty pounds.
Corn, shelled, fifty-six pounds.
Corn ear (husked), seventy pounds.
Cucumbers, fifty pounds.
Currants, forty pounds.
Gooseberries, forty pounds.
Grapes, forty-eight pounds.
Onions, fifty pounds.
Onion sets, twenty-eight pounds.
Parsnips, fifty pounds.
Peaches, forty-eight pounds.
Pears, fifty pounds.
Peas, green (unshelled), fifty-six pounds.
Plums, sixty-four pounds.
Potatoes, sixty pounds.

Fight or Surrender?

Carranza and his generals, through Consul Silliman, have notified the United States that the very letter of the plan of Guadalupe must be carried out. Carranza has gone to Tampico, where he can easily take steamer to Vera Cruz and proceed to the capital when Huerta flees. The rebel forces are converging against the city from the east, west and north. The stage is fully set for the last act. Whether this will be a peaceful and unconditional surrender or a last mad struggle against the inevitable is what is worrying officials.

May Sail on Spanish Ship.

Vera Cruz, July 15.—The Spanish liner Alfonso XIII is in port. The Huerta and Blanquet refugees are expected to sail for Havana on the Alfonso tomorrow.

BASEBALL AS PLAYED ON THE BRITISH ISLES

Batters Run Until Exhausted—
Score in One Game, 172 to 97

BY FRANK G. MENKE.

New York, July 15.—They played a game of baseball over on those dear, old British Isles some weeks ago, with the following result.

Innings.	1st	2nd	Total
Teams,	66	106	172
England	39	57	96

Game called on account of the general weariness of the players after the second inning.

Commenting on the attempt made by the Welsh gang to overcome a 133 run lead in their half of the second, one of English newspapers said:

The Welshmen never looked like making the 134 runs needed to win the game, but they tried hard. H. Evans, of the Grange gasworks, and E. Seer, of the Phil harriers, who was captain of the team, executed the most noble work, for they recorded 13 runs each, as the result of their labors, but the side was out in 57 runs. As we understand the situation, Messrs. Evans and Seer messed up the opposing pitcher to such an extent that they were given the privilege of running around the bases 13 times each and that divers and sundry other of their team-mates contributed the other 31 runs that were tallied during the final half inning of the pastime.

However, neither of the Welsh messrs. need get conceited about what they did. A few of their English opponents went them slightly better in the run making business. In the first inning L. Higgins made 15 runs and J. Baron 14, while in the second inning, Higgins contributed 25 runs and Barron aided his side by ambling around the bases 20 times.

One of our English brethren, who has been given the title of "base-ball expert" by the editor-in-chief of the paper in which he works, wrote an article about baseball after the aforementioned game was over. If you don't believe that this fellow is an expert on baseball and knows all the ins-and-outs of the said game, we submit evidence, the evidence being the article that he wrote in which he explained the game to those who didn't know much about it—and who perhaps don't know much more now.

Here is the article, in part:

"Baseball lacks the stately dignity of cricket. It is a strenuous and hustling, if not a highly skillful game. It has many merits. It should appeal to a public whose ideas have been speeded up by professional football. The impression that this match conveyed was that a splendid eye is needed for success as a batsman. The bat, which is no more than three and a half inches wide, is held at right angles to the body, chest high."

Then the expert goes on to describe some of the rules of the game. Here is the description of one rule, but it must be one they made in England. No one seems to know anything about it over here:

"A batter is allowed to miss only one ball, which the umpire passes as a good one. On a second offense he is ruled out."

Can anyone imagine what would happen if some umpire tried to "rule out" Heinie Zimmerman after he had taken only two swipes at the ball?

"The greatest excitement develops declares our English 'expert', 'when only two of three men remain not out, for then hard hitting and quick dashes to the home base become a necessity.'"

Our "expert" tosses bouquets at one of the English players named F. Moore, who made "five hits for four each in the first inning." In other words, Mr. Moore seems to have poked out four circuit smashes.

If he did, we'll go out "expert" in one stanza, one farther in the bouquet idea. We'll have a hot-house at Mr. Moore. He's got it coming if he did really execute these five home runs.

Continuing in his description, our "expert" assumes the populace that:

"Smart fielding and accurate returns to the various basemen are important features, but as the ball is nearly always in the air the necessity for a well cut and rolled field does not arise."

Judging from the number of runs made, it would be safe to assume that "the ball was nearly always in the air," and, no doubt, last seen when disappearing over the fence, in case they used fences in that game.

"An attractive feature of the game" we are told, "is that there is no waste of time. As each batsman makes his stroke and reaches first, second or home base, as the case may be, the next batter is ready to do his bowling."

Refreshments, in the form of tea, were served throughout the contest.

SPORTING NOTES

An Interesting Game.

Muncie shut out Winburne last evening on the latter's grounds by a score of 2-0. The game was one of the best witnessed in this section this season, and was free from any scrapping or objections to the umpire's decisions.

Not a score was made up to the ninth inning, when there were two men on bases, two men down and two strikes called on the batter. John Troup, Muncie's second baseman, who knocked a two-bagger and run in 2 scores. Battery—Winburne, Reed and Parks; Muncie, Swartz and Morarity.

WOODLAND WEDDING

Lloyd Coulter and Miss Hester Campman Happily Married.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. David Campman, of Woodland, was the scene of a very pleasant event at high noon on July 13, when their daughter, Miss Hester, became the wife of Lloyd Coulter, a son of Mrs. Susan Coulter, of Odessa, Pa. Maids of honor, Misses Oma Livergood and Pearl Barger. The marriage ceremony of the U. B. church was used by the bride's pastor, the Rev. E. G. Spessard. After the wishing of joy and happiness to the newly married couple by the many present, all were invited into the dining room to a table which, if it could speak for itself, would tell of the heavy burden under which it groaned.

Immediately after dinner the bride and groom were given an auto ride in the car of Isaac Connard, of Woodland. In the evening music was furnished by the young calichumpian orchestra of Woodland. A box of cigars was enjoyed, as well as ice cream and candy.

Those present: Mrs. Henry Turner and daughters Isabella and Evelyn and son Frank; Mrs. Robert Dougherty and daughter, Helen, of Clearfield; Mrs. Susan Coulter and Elmer Yeasay, of Odessa; Mrs. R. G. Barger, a sister of the bride, and son Raymond, of Gorton; Mrs. J. L. Miller, a sister of the bride, and daughters, Madeline and Helen, and sons, Kenneth, Russel and Walter, of Beach Creek; Mr. and Mrs. David Campman and daughter, Hazel and son, Burton; Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Connard, Mr. and Mrs. John Palmer, Mrs. H. N. Gilpatrick, Mrs. James Graffius, Mrs. Mary Cowder, Miss Oma Livergood, Lloyd Coulter, Rev. and Mrs. E. G. Spessard and daughters, Ruth, and Miss Pearl Barger, Mr. and Mrs. Arline, of Woodland.

They will take up their residence at Surveyor Run. All wish them a happy recollection of the day and a prosperous voyage through life.

It's pleasing to take—The Daily Progress.
